

CINP Ethics Prize in Psychopharmacology

INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF NEUROPSYCHOPHARMACOLOGY

The CINP is pleased to announce the establishment of a prize in Ethics in Psychopharmacology to be given biannually at the annual meeting in parallel with the other international CINP sponsored prizes. The prize applications will be judged by an international committee of experts in this field and will recognize achievements in research in ethics in psychopharmacology, in promotion of public awareness of ethics in psychopharmacology and contributions to the world wide solution of problems in ethical practice of psychopharmacology. While ethics involves all of human behavior, including medicine and medical research, psychopharmacology raises numerous sensitive ethical issues related to the very essence of human nature. Areas included for consideration in this prize include 1) ethics of scientific responsibility in publishing in psychopharmacology, 2) conflict of interest in clinical research, 3) treatment of research subjects both human and animal, 4) informed consent in psychopharmacology research and 5) doctor patient relationships in psychopharmacology.

Applicants must be nominated by a CINP member and include a CV and one to three page statement of the justification of the nomination. All submissions should be received by 8th January 2010.
